ALABAMA SLIM

Blue And Lonesome

Music Maker - MMCD133

Recorded during 2006 and 2007, Blue And Lonesome is Alabama Slim's second release on Music Maker, and it is a good one. The album, which occasionally features back-up musicians and Slim's cousin, Little Freddie King, is as strong and consistent a release as Music Maker has put out. Alabama Slim is in fine form on the album's 12 mostly original songs (Fannie Mae and Someday Baby are different takes on the original versions). Blue And Lonesome is an introspective song conjuring images of after-hours, back-alley rambling in a country town where folks roll sidewalks up at dusk. That atmosphere continues on Two O'Clock In The Morning and Weather Done Got Cloudy. The album picks up a little with a hat tip to John Lee Hooker in Old Folks Boogie but rarely gets any faster lest the listener dislocate a hip. Another highlight of the album is I Love My Guitar, which is slick sounding, and thus a little out of place here, but still fun. Alabama Slim's Blue And Lonesome is a simple but meditative outing from one of Music Maker's more enigmatic artists.

ROB STONE

Back Around Here

Earwig - 4961

Listening to classic postwar Chicago blues revivalist Rob Stone's first studio record in seven years, Back Around Here, you can't help but recall the vocal inflection Muddy Waters had when he sang "she moves me, man" back in 1952. Stone's got that shrewd, slow-flaring drawl about him, and a harp to match. It's downright chilling how Stone captures the sound of the golden age of Chess Records with a big, warm analog thump and a delivery that comes straight out of a long-since-passed South Side haunt like Theresa's or Pepper's.

Stone, a regular performer at Chicago's House of Blues and co-founder of the traditionalist outfit the C-Notes, takes the romp of 1950s Chicago and punctuates it with a grinding funk flair à la Junior Wells and soul variation that relies heavily on a Sam Cooke-inspired R&B tinge. Stone's C-Notes bandmates Chris James and Patrick Rynn are central to the ambience of the record, contributing guitar and bass respectively. Other notable cast members include Willie "Big Eyes" Smith on select drum tracks and pianist David Maxwell, whose plinking keys help shuffle along the flippant boogie on many of the tracks. A cover of Magic Sam's Give Me Time bubbles with precision-laced soul and a killer quiver, while Chicago All Night celebrates the town's after-hours debauchery with a growling sax-fueled blues rumba. Other standouts include the lung-scarring harmonica instrumental Dragon Killers, where Stone's licks fly like shards of glass through the air, and the early rock 'n' roll-themed jump of Can't Turn Back The Clock—originally done by the "5" Royales.

Back Around Here sounds like a time-capsule piece, recorded at 2120 South Michigan Avenue, with the cigarette of Leonard Chess illuminating the studio control room, while Rob Stone lays down a torrid harp run in front of a smirking, bass-pumping Willie Dixon. If there was any justice, Rob Stone would be one of the guys bringing this music back to its rightful stature.
